PUBLIC PARK

Fort Meigs May Become a Public Pleasure.

After years of effort, historic Fort Meigs has at last become public property and is owned by the state of Ohio, says the Toledo Blade. At its last session the legislature authorized $25,000 for the purchase of the grounds and the erection of an appropriate memorial. The grounds consisting of thirty-six acres, were secured for $10,800, which leaves a balance of $14,000 for the memorial.

Of course, this is only the beginning. Were this historic spot in any one of the New England states it would have been converted long ago into a beautiful park, improved and filled with monuments.

Fort Meigs means much to the whole country and especially that part known as the Northwest territory. The victory of the Americans over the British and Indians made possible the early development of all this section. There is not another spot in Ohio which has greater historic value, nor one which, if made attractive, will draw so many visitors from all parts of the country, than Fort Meigs.

Now that the state owns the old fort site the commission should look forward to securing funds to park the grounds. Kentucky and Pennsylvania are especially interested in the improvement of the battle ground for there lie some of the bravest sons of these states.

The location of Fort Meigs makes it easy to convert it into one of the most beautiful parks in the country. To do this will require time and money, but a good beginning has been made and intelligent, persistent and patriotic endeavor will bring the desired results.

The New Fall and Winter Fabrics

The August number of the WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION has some advance information on fall and winter styles. Of the fabrics to be used, Grace Margaret Gould, the Fashion Editor, says:

"For the mannish tailor-made suits hard-finished worsteds will be used. The new worsteds are medium in weight. Their wearing qualities are above reproach, and they come in the most fascinating array of stripes, small broken and unbroken checks, plaids and plain colors. In these materials stripes are the most in favor. Serge will be much used as well as cheviot. Cloth plaids promise to be less a rumored fashion and more a fact this fall and winter than for many a past season. The dark blue serge tailor-made costume will be extremely fashionable for early fall wear, with just a touch of plaid or orange cloth in the pipings on the folds of the skirt and the lapels and cuffs of the coat."
